

Unsold Dwellings (Inventory)

Important Information

National indicators show that the inventory of unsold dwellings in the country have reached record levels. As a contractor, this statistic can have many impacts on your business, one of which is an increased risk of loss to homes in your inventory.

At Roe, we pride ourselves on being a market leader in builders risk insurance, which is why we often offer extensions on your policies to help protect you when you may need it most.

Roe can provide residential builders risk coverage on a new construction project of up to three years using your reporting form. If you have unsold inventory after the initial three years offered, you have the option to purchase additional years of coverage on our separate Builders Risk policies.

The option to offer additional coverage for additional years was added in response to the growing number of unsold dwellings. This is one more example of how Roe is dedicated to helping clients when they need it most.

Please contact us today to find out more on how to extend coverage for your unsold dwellings.
